Peer Gynt Story Synopsis

Once upon a time there was a young boy named Peer Gynt that lived with his mother in Norway. Although quite charming, he was lazy and foolish. One day he met a beautiful girl named Solveig, the daughter of a rich farmer. Because Peer's father had left the family in debt, his mother hoped that the family fortune would be restored if Peer married Solveig. Unfortunately, Solveig's parents did not like Peer and did not approve of their plans to marry. Brokenhearted, Peer decided to run away to the mountains to be alone.

On his journey Peer met three beautiful dairy maids and several trolls. The next day Peer struck his head on a rock and dreamed of a beautiful girl in a green dress, the daughter of the troll mountain king. Together they rode a horse to the hall of the mountain king. When they arrived, the king told Peer that he would have to become a troll if he wished to marry his daughter. He liked the mountain king's daughter, though not as much a Solveig. Peer considers becoming a troll, but decides not to. Fearing making the king angry, he decides to sneak away while it is still dark.

Peer had many other adventures while visiting different countries of the world. Years later he returned to his home and decided that going home, living with his mother, and being a responsible young man, was the best adventure of all.
